When I first meet with a client, I want to look smart, edited and restrained, but always with a sense of creativeness. I'll wear one distinctive piece—a vintage pin or a belt—but I'll never push the look over the top. Clients absolutely decide whether or not to hire me based on what I'm wearing. Fashion don't: An overly short mini skirt. Or too-high heels. Nothing that says, "Look at my clothes, not at my skills."
